

The drill-only energy policy

America's energy problem can't be fixed by simply drilling for more oil. That's like using a Band-Aid when you really need a crash cart. In fact our growing addiction to oil and other fossil fuels is exactly what's putting our country at risk in a global energy market, while we pump out more and more global warming pollution.

The cure is also to get started on a new, clean-energy economy, with incentives for more affordable hybrids, electric vehicles and more energy-efficient buildings. And Congress needs to require that more of our electricity will come from clean alternative sources, like wind and solar power, and extend the tax incentives to make this a reality.

The real cure: a new, clean-energy economy
